U.S. Offers Help in Containing Libya

Officials Assail Tripoli and Promise to Back Its Opponents

WASHINGTON — The Renga

WASHINGTON — The Resign administration has declared that the United States will support all African states that want to resist interventionism from Libya. "The administration, like many others in the world, is deeply concerned about Libyan interventionism in Africa, and in particular, the presence of Libyan troops in Chad," Chester A. Crocker, assistant secretary of state designate for African affairs, and Thesday at a foreign-policy conference, at the

There are currently 6,000 to 7,000 Libyan troops in Chad, where they have remained since late last year when they intervened in a civil war on the side of President Goukomi Oueddei. They have not left, despite calls from African states that they do so.

A U.S. official said Tuesday that as a result of high-level policy decisions made by the Reagan administration, the following steps have been taken or will be taken soon:

 Although 10 percent of U.S. oil imports come from Libya, the administration has decided it will not let its confrontational policy toward Libya be affected by oil concerns, a senior official said Tuesday.  A major diplomatic campaign has been under way for some time to isolate Libya internationally and to press African states to publicize their hostility toward Libya. ministration was that any military action against Libya could lead to unforeseen problems.

Last summer and fall, U.S. highaltitude reconnaissance planes were intercepted a number of times over the Mediterranean by Libyan fighter planes in what mili-tary officials decribed as a war of nerves. Libya charged violations of its airspace, which the United States denied.

The Reagan administration, according to State Department offi-cials, would be willing now to encourage actions against the regime of Libya's revolutionary leader, Col. Moamer Qadhafi. But it is up the African states to take the lead, officials said.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has been particularly vitu-perative against the Qadhafi regime, linking it publicly to Soviet-backed terrorism abroad.

In St. Louis last Friday, Mr. Haig said Libya's oil revenues "are almost exclusively diverted to the purchase of armaments, the training of international terrorists, and the conduct of direct interventionism in the neighboring states of northern Africa, the most recent of which being the invasion of Chad."

The oil industry is watching Nigeria, Algeria, Libya, Norway and Britain for the next price breaks. Major companies have been press-ing these countries, as well as Mexico, to cut prices that are currently so high that many companies say they are losing $3 or more on every barrel of oil in the refining process.

The mounting pressure on the producing countries is evident from the fact that Mexico official-ly denied Sunday that it would change its prices before July 1. Analysts said huyer resistance apparently made the delay impossible

Analysts See Little Likelihood Syria Expects War With Israel

By Drew Middleton New York Times Service

NEW YORK - With its southern frontier with Egypt now se-cure. Israel has complete freedom of action against Syria and other potential Arab enemies.

As a result, military analysis in Washington and London do not expect Syria to go to war against Israel despite belligerent statements from Damascus. "Arabs oc-casionally act erratically," a British analyst said recently in London, "but not to the point of taking on the Israelis alone. They may be erratic, but they're not mad."

The Western intelligence community appears generally unim-pressed by Prime Minister Menachem Begin's reports that Syria has called up "tens of thousands" of reservists and by other Israeli reports that Libyan forces have been deployed in Lebanon to support Syrian troops and the guerrillas of the Palestine Liberation Organizaunlikely to unleash its full force against Syria. But they do not doubt that with the forces Israel has and with its reserve mobilization system, military pressure could be brought against Syria at any one of several points.

The Syrian government and high command are highly sensitive to tary and the Christian forces in Lebanon. Some British sources said that Syria's belligerence was based on its fear regarding a road that the Phalangists started to huild early last month to connect their bases along the coast with the Bekaa Valley.

The consensus among the Western analysts was that the Syrians' main concerns were preserving the territorial integrity of their own country and barring Israeli or Phalangist moves toward the Bekaa Valley. One indication of that concern, analysts said, was that the Syrian forces in Lebanon are second-line troops, with the besttrained and best-equipped forces arrayed to defend Syria.

Ship Reportedly Violated U.S. Order to Leave Japan

By Rudy Maxa

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — A U.S. Navy landing ship apparently carrying nuclear weapons remained off Japan's shores into the mid-1960s, according to two officers who were stationed on the ship. This would be at least three years after the Pentagon, according to the understanding of senior offi-cials in the Kennedy administration, had ordered it to stay clear of Japanese territory. The San Joaquin County, an LST (landing ship, tank), remained 100 to 200 yards from the Marine air base at Iwakuni through 1964 and perhaps later, the officers said. At the time the two nations had a treaty that prohibited the deploy-ment of nuclear weapons in Japa-nese territory, but there remains a question of whether the treaty covered storage of nuclear warheads on ships. A political furor in Japan emerged last month when Edwin O. Reischauer, a former U.S. ambassador to Japan, said U.S. war-ships had had nuclear weapons aboard over a 20-year period when they entered Japanese ports for routine stopovers.

Two weeks ago, two former officials in the Kennedy administra-tion, Paul H. Nitze, who was as-sistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, and U. Alexis Johnson, who was deputy undersecretary of state for political affairs, confirmed that the LSI had been anchored off Iwakuni into 1961, as asserted in a memo written 10 years later by Daniel Ellsberg, a former Defense Department specialist on nuclear com-mand and control systems. But both Mr. Nitze and Mr.

Johnson told a reporter that when informed in 1961 of the ship's assignment - which reportedly had been concealed from the administration — the Pentagon ordered it to remain in Okinawa, where it was undergoing repairs.

Pledge of Secrecy

A different account was provided by Michael O'Harro, who was the communications officer aboard the San Joaquin County until November, 1963, two years after the ship had supposedly been ordered away from Japan. Except for three months in Guam for repairs and a brief stop at Okinawa, the ship was stationed at Iwakuni during his IImonth tour of duty, Mr. O'Harro said. Copies of his orders confirm his assignment.

Mr. O'Harro will neither confirm nor deny the existence of nuclear weapons aboard the ship bewhile in the Navy.

Another former officer, who asked that his named not be used. said he had been stationed aboard the San Joaquin County at Iwakuni until May, 1964. He acknowledged that the mission of the ship bad not changed since its arrival at least five years earlier. The officer, now retired, said he learned in a recent conversation with another former officer who served on the ship that it did not depart lwakuni until 1966 or 1967. He said that the ship's crew knew it carried nuclear weapons. The Navy will neither confirm nor deny the existence of nuclear weapons at any location. The dis-closure about the LST two weeks ago arose from the 1971 memo. which was provided to The Washington Post by Mr. Ellsberg.

In 1961, according to the memo. Mr. Ellsberg notified Mr. Nitze of his discovery that the LST actually was permanently anchored off Iwakuni. By contrast, Mr. Johnson recalled having been alerted by the U.S. Embassy.

According to Mr. Ellsberg's account, Mr. Nitze prepared a recommendation for Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara to order the ship to remain in Okinawa. He wrote that Mr. McNamara had signed such an order but had withdrawn it to avoid a quarrel with the Navy. Mr. Nitze and Mr. John-son recalled, however, that the ship had been given the order promptly. Mr. McNamara, the departing president of the World Bank, has not returned reporters' calls on the

"But if Spain knocks on the door on Monday," said an official in Brussels, "it will have a posinve answer on Tuesday." At last month's meeting of alliance foreign ministers in Rome, Joseph Luns, the NATO secretary-general, said its 15 states favored Spain's membership.
While the Union of the Demo-

Adolfo Suarez, who resigned as premier a month before the coup attempt, was tempted to view Spain's willingness to join NATO as a lever to gain concessions from the British on the slow-moving Gi-braltar talks and from other Western European states on the even more prolonged EEC accession no-gotiations. .In April, Mr. Calvo Sotelo made a quick visit to West Germany to explain his NATO plans to Chan-cellor Helmut Schmidt. The opinion of Mr. Schmidt's Social Democrats weighs importantly in Spain because of their close ties with the Socialist opposition in Spain, and Mr. Calvo Sotelo wanted to scotch any impression that West Germany was lukewarm to his NATO Strategy.

In the wake of the coup attempt, Felipe Gonzalez, the Socialist lead-er, has somewhat moderated his party's traditional opposition to Spanish membership. In a conversation this week, Mr. Gouzalez emphasized that his party was not against NATO as an alliance, and that he would not associate the Socialists with street demonstrations against the government's plans.

But the Socialist leader argued. as he has in the past, that Spain's catry into the Atlantic alliance would upset the delicate East-West balance while contributing little to this country's security. British Social Democrats Facing a Test of Strength

By R.W. Apple Jr. New York Times Service

LONDON - Britain's new Social Democratic Party, which set out on its own course because of the Labor Party's drift to the left, bas been given its first chance to show some political muscle.

The opportunity, a by-election to fill one seat in Parliament, comes at a time when the Labor left, led by Tony Benn, is gaining so much strength that centrists within the party are beginning to despair. That should be a plus for the Social Democrats. But the opportunity also comes in a constimency where third parties have done poorly, and it comes before the Social Democrats have worked out terms of cooperation with the Liberal Party.

"We greatly welcome the opportunity to fight the by-election in Warrington, and subject to the wishes of our local members and consultation with the Liberals we intend to do so," said William Rodgers, one of the new party's four principal founders, served as secretary of state for transportation in the last Labor government. But another of the founders, who asked not to be named, said, "It isn't a good constituency for us, and it will be very difficult indeed for us to win it, even if everything should break in our favor."

Lack of Candidates

As a result, acither Roy Jenkins, a former foreign secretary, nor Shirley Williams, the popular former Labor member who lost in the 1979 general election, is willing to contest the seat. The other two Social Democratie founders, Mr. Rodgers and David Owen, another former foreign secretary, already sit in the House of Commons.

The Liberals have said that they would be willing to stand aside only if the Social Democrats named a nationally known figure. such as Mrs. Williams or Mr. Jenkins or perhaps David Marquand, a politician and scholar who has served as a British commissioner of the European Economie Community. The Social Democrats have insisted that they must be free to name whom they please, pointing up the tension that exists between the two centrist groups.

If both ran candidates at Warrington — or at the next general election — neither would stand any chance of victory. The vacancy was created by the appointment of Sir Thomas Williams, a Labor member not related to Shirley Williams, as a judge. Warrington, an industrial borough between Liverpool and Manchester, is one of the safest Labor seats. Sir Thomas held it two years ago with a majority of 10,274, and the Liberals ran a weak third with only 2,833 votes.

No date has been set for the election, but it is expected to be held within the next six weeks.

Third Largest Party

The Social Democrats established their new party with a flourish on March 26. They already have members of Parliament, the third largest party. They have attracted 50,000 members, enough to give hope that they can bring about a historic realignment of British politics.

A poll late in April by Market and Opinion Research Interna-tional gave the Social Democrats 14 percent, the Liberals 23 percent, the Conservatives 28 percent and Labor 33 percent.

These figures show a large publie appetite for the politics of the center, in preference to the rightist philosophy of Prime Minister Marearet Thatcher and the increasingly militant leftist posture of Labor.

Mr. Benn, who has already forced through structural changes in the Labor Party that give tremendous new powers to the left, has challenged Denis Healey, the former chancellor of the Exchequer, for the deputy leader's job. He hopes to win that position as a springboard for an eventual bid to succeed Michael Foot, 67, as party leader.

Even if the embattled Mr. Healey manages to nose out Mr. Benn this time by rallying the support of the more conservative trade unions, Mr. Benn is determined to try again. Socialists Announce Economic Benefits

By Jonathan Kandell International Herald Tribune

PARIS -- The Socialist government of President François Mitterrand announced on Wednesday a 10-percent increase in the minimum salary and other economic benefits aimed at improving living standards for the poorest French

The measures - which also included a 25-percent increase in government aid to families with many children, an increase of up to 20 percent in payments for the elderly, and a 25-percent rise in rent subsidies for the poor—were welcomed by union leaders.

But business spokesmen warned that the increase in the minimum wage - brought up to 16.72 francs (about $3) an hour - would be inflationary and hit hardest at the smaller and medium enterprises that employ most of the low-salaried laborers.

The government said that the salary increases would be partially offset by a reduction in social charges paid by companies for their lowest wage-earners. The government also plans to finance the other economic measures by additional taxes on high personal in-comes and "excess profit taxes" on banks and petroleum companies.

Campaign Opens

The announcement of the economic package coincided with the opening this week of the campaign for legislative elections on June 14 and 21. President Mitterrand is hoping to gain a leftist majority in the National Assembly to enable his government to pass the bulk of its economic programs, including the nationalization of 11 major industrial groups and the remaining private banks and insurance firms. A spokesman for the Socialistleaning CFDT labor federation applanded the economic measures, pointing out that they met the de-mands put forth by the union lead-ership. The Communist-controlled CGT trade union, the largest in the country, which had called for an immediate 20-percent increase in the minimum salary, responded less enthusiastically, but indicated it would not fight for further raises at this point. "They could have done better," said Henri Krasucki, a CGT leader and member of the Communist Party Politburo. Although the measures were expected, they had sparked a debate during the last few days among the government's economic advisers. The more cautious officials argued that the wage increases would eventually be passed on to con-sumers in the form of higher pric-es, and that rising labor costs would discourage the hiring of new workers, particularly young blue-collar job-seekers who often start at the minimum salary. Unemployment, which was the biggest issue in the recent presireached 1.7 million people, more than 40 percent of them youths un-der 25. The annual inflation rate is running at about 14 percent. Other economic advisers maintained that the 10-percent increase in the minimum wage need not be inflationary and could stoke consumer demand that might eventually lead companies to hire additional employees.

Begin Makes New Attacks on Schmidt, Says All Germans Guilty for Holocaust

By David K. Shipler New York Times Service

JERUSALEM - Prime Minister Menachem Begin escalated his vendetta Wednesday against Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany and the German

The Israeli leader's latest outburst was triggered by complaints in the Knesset (parliament) by Amnon Rubinstein of the Shinui (Change) movement that Mr. Begin's earlier diatribes in party speeches against Mr. Schmidt had gratuitiously offended foreign countries and statesmen, exposed curity secrets and further isolated Israel.

In his reply, Mr. Begin com-plained Mr. Schmidt had not an-swered a question in an earlier speech: whether his service in Hitler's army in Europe had included Brest-Litovsk. The prime minis-ter's parents perished in the Holocaust there.

Mr. Begin said be was still smarting under the chancellor's statement that West Germany had a moral obligation to the Palestinian Arabs. Mr. Schmidt had said the Germans had no quarrel with the Palestinians. "Of course not," Mr. Begin snorted. "The grand mufti [of Jerusalem, their leader in the 1940s] sided with Hitler."

Fitting Reply

The Israeli leader said dozens of German Jews and non-Jews had written to him stating his response was the most fitting reply by the prime minister of the Jewish state to a German who had been an officer in Hitler's army.
"He can shout to high heaven

One student from Chris Botha high school told the Johannesburg Star the demonstration had been held because "protest is the only weapon we have to show solidarity with Aziz Jardine, our student leader who was detained by police last week." The main body of protesters was met by police as the students marched from the high school to the nearby high school of Westbury, also for those of mixed race, known as colored in South Africa.

Arms Level In Nicaragua

By John M. Goshko

WASHINGTON - Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. says the Reagan administration is "watching with increasing concern" the levels of sophisticated weapons being shipped into Nicaragua and "the high level of manpower" being assigned to the Nicaraguan armed forces.

"We see no threat to Nicaragnal that justifies increases of this size," Mr. Haig said Tuesday. "We will be watching closely the levels of arms that have arrived and that are expected to arrive."

Mr. Haig, answering questions at a State Department meeting for editors and broadcasters from around the country, was asked about a report by The Washington Post that the United States had received intelligence reports that Soviet T-55 tanks may have been sent secretly into Nicaragua.

He refused to comment directly on the report. But he did contend that high levels of arms "of a wor-risome nature" were continuing to flow into Nicaragua from Cuba. Some of this arms flow, Mr. Haig said, continues to be diverted to leftist guerrillas fighting the U.S.-backed government in neigh-boring El Salvador. Although he cited a big buildup of forces by Nicaragua's leftist-oriented revolutionary government, Mr. Haig did not specify whether any of the alleged flow was part of a long-rumored plan to equip the Nicaragnans with Soviet weaponry including tanks and MiG fighters. Earlier, however, Dean Fischer, the department spokesman, con-firmed that the United States had received intelligence reports that Soviet tanks may have been shipped into Nicaragua and that additional tanks were in Cuba awaiting delivery.

While Mr. Fischer said the reports had not been confirmed, he added that the presence of such Soviet weapons would pose "se-rious problems" for other Central American countries.

Congressional Conferees Set Tight Rules For Federally Funded Abortions in U.S.

WASHINGTON - House and Senate conferees have ratified the most stringent restrictions ever placed on Medicaid abortions after rejecting a measure passed by the House that would have extended restrictions on abortion to U.S.

mployees. The conferees also rejected a House proposal to prohibit the use of U.S. funds to carry out affirmative-action programs, which are designed to promote the accept-ance of minority and women applicants for jobs and schools.

The action Tuesday occurred as the conferees approved supplemental appropriations of $13 billion needed to keep the government operating for the rest of this fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30. The exact amount will be determined later by conference aides, but the conferees were confident that the amount was well within the limits on the budget approved by both houses and endorsed by sident Reagan.

Although supplemental appro-priation bills nominally deal only with U.S. spending commitments, they have traditionally been used to break new ground in legislation. Such bills were used in that way to stop paying for the Vietnam War, to restrict the use of U.S. funds for abortions and to prohibit the use of federal funds for school busing to achieve desegregation.

Under the supplemental appropriation bill, Medicaid funds cannot be used to pay for abortions except when they are necessary to save the life of the mother. Under present law, those funds can also be used for abortions in cases of incest, and rape reported within three days.

U.S. Watches 2 Romanian Defectors Say CLA Reneged On Promises After They Spilled Secrets me and dumped me," Mr. Traian ily in Romania that he was sen-

By Roy Gutman

WASHINGTON Romanian diplomats who defected to the United States have accused the CIA of breaking promises to resettle them in return for giving secrets about Romania.

The two are Nicolae Horodinea, 35, formerly third secretary at the Romanian Embassy in Washington, and Nicola Traian, 32, who held the same rank at the mission in Islamabad, Pakistan.

Dale Peterson, a CIA spokes-man, said that after lengthy high-level consideration the agency had decided not to comment on the allegations.

Mr. Horodinca, his wife and 3-year-old son were given asylum in March, 1980, after he drove into nearby Fort Belvoir, Va. His wife and son have since returned to Romania. Mr. Traian defected in November, 1979, with his wife and two children. He said he had been the Romanian intelligence agency station chief in Islamabad.

He said that CIA officials had promised these benefits during six months of debricfings but that other officials charged with reset-tling him and his family had subsequently reneged on the promises.

Mr. Horodinca said the CIA had "skinned" him of information, had reduced promised financial aid, and had not belped him find

The main complaint of both men was that after months of giving secrets and while they were still arning new professions - Mr. Horodinca is studying computer programming and Mr. Traian has just completed examinations for his real-estate license - CIA support was barely above subsistence level. U.S. Agency Chief Defends Cancer Grant

By Robert Reinhold New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The director of the National Cancer Institute has defended his agency's award last year of a $910,000 research grant to a scientist accused of falsi-fying data under a previous research project, saying that the charges against the scientist had not been proven.

However, the director, Dr. Vincent T. DeVita Ir., said Tuesday at a Senate hearing that under the agency's new procedures, the grant would have been deferred until investigations had been completed.

The issue involving the accused scientist, Dr. Marc J. Straus, formerly of Boston University, formed the centerpiece of a hearing by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee into allegations of lax management and misspending by the institute. The committee chairman, Sen. Omin G. Hatch of Utah, said at the end of the hearing that there had been "gross mismanagement" at the agency in recent years.

The hearing was marked by disagreements between Sen. Hatch, a Republican, and the Democratic minority, particularly Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, who suggested that the chairman was dredging up old news for the sake of new publicity. "Most of the problems we will hear about today have already been placed in the public record," Sen Kennedy said. As he spoke, his staff distributed copies of articles published last year by The Soviet Pressure on Poland

In the middle of April some rank-and-file members of the Polisb Communist Party met in Torun, the birthplace of Copernicus, and drafted a set of principles that if adopted would put an end to Soviet-style rule in Poland. In the following weeks, Moscow was strangely silent. But now, with the Polish party congress that will debate those reforms approaching next month, a strident Soviet campaign has been launched to bully the Polish party back into line.

It began with the orcbestrated release by pro-Soviet Poles of the so-called Katowice resolutions, which accused the current party leadership of the worst crimes in the Marxist-Leninist lexicon — revisionism and counter-revolution. That was immediately followed up by blasts from the Soviet, East German and Czechoslovak press. Charges included opportunism, anarcho-liberalism, the breakdown of law and order and falling under the influence of foreigners, Zionists and Trotsky-

The Czechoslovaks, ominously, mentioned 1968, when fraternal Warsaw Pact forces intervened in their country because the Communist Party had turned "revisionist and counterrevolutionary" just as the Polish party is said to be threatening to do now. In plain English, the Marxist-Leninist jargon translates as trying to become more demo-

Many editorials, ours included, said in the early days of the Polish crisis that any fundamental change in the party structure would be intolerable to the Kremlin. But it no longer seems quite so clear what the Soviet Union might decide to tolerate. The Russians know that an invasioo of Poland would be met by fierce resistance; that mini-rebellions could break out in satellite countries or even in the Soviet Union itself, and that Soviet relations with the West would be poisoned for a long

Nevertheless, Moscow apparently has decided to try to force the Poles to retreat from democratic reform. The Russians may have chosen to move now because, among other reasons, the death of Cardinal Wyszynski has deprived the Polish people of one of their wisest leaders and Solidarity head Lech Walesa is out of the country at an ILO meeting. If that is the case, though, they appear to have miscalculated. Party officials, journalists and labor leaders bave rallied together against the Katowice group and have rejected the Soviet-bloc criticism.

If there is a common force uniting Poles at this point, it is oationalism, popularly expressed by the slogan, "Let Poland be Poland." And that, too, is a threat to the Soviet empire because any nationalism is by definition in conflict with Socialist internationalism. Poles have always been intensely nationalistic, and intensely anti-Soviet, but in the past, the party was always able to keep things under control. When there were problems, a leadership shakeup resolved them.

But that has changed oow. It is no longer possible to repair things with a quick fix at the top. It is possible that if Moscow can't bluff the Poles out of their party reforms, it will back down. But no one knows for sure what the Russians will do. And only the Poles can decide bow far to go in their quest for more freedom. In the process, though, they deserve every bit of encouragement the West can give them.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

According to the budget schedule, by the end of oext week congressional authorizing committees are to complete legislation turning the more than $35 billion in cuts voted in last mooth's budget resolution into real reductions in program benefits and services. In the House, the largest piece of the budgetcutting action - more than $10 billion has been dealt to the Education and Labor Committee, Chairman Carl Perkins and many other members find this task so uncongenial that they have still oot decided wbether to take it on at all.

Should this committee fail to act, the job of cutting would fall to the House Budget Committee. With time short, it is likely that the Budget Committee would leave the administration proposals intact, providing only a slim chance for further change wheo the mammoth budget legislative package comes to the floor. This would be unfortunate.

It is true that Education and Labor has little room to maneuver. The budget process is such that it can only reorder the administration's speoding priorities by trading among its own programs. Some obvious savings it might claim - like restricting the scope of Davis-Bacon and other labor-protection statutes — are "worthless" to it since the cost reductions will show up in other budget areas, such as defense. Lack of time for hearings and public debate further increases the general reluctance to make costsaving changes in the basic terms of programs. Nooetheless, there are some changes the committee can and should make.

The most important would be to sharpen the formulas that distribute the big dollars in education and job programs so that what is left goes to the geographical areas that need it most. Requiring state and local matching of federal aid oo an ability-to-pay basis would also stretch dollars. This would free up money to continue operation of the successful but now doomed job and training programs for low-income youth, welfare recipients and other special problem groups.

The committee doesn't have to buy the administratioo's block-grant approach to recognize that some housecleaning is in order. Some members may wish to preserve the skeleton of each program against the day wheo another government will put meat back oo the bones. But it is time to ask whether all these special entities were ever worth operating from the federal level. This doesn't oecessarily mean abandoning federal aid to lowincome children and other groups unlikely to be served adequately by states. The better targets would be the heavily state-financed vocational educatioo program, in which federal leverage is now very small, and educatioo aid to areas with large military installations, which is properly a defense responsi-

This would still leave the Education and Labor Committee with the unenviable job of making deep cuts in some very useful programs. But the committee will serve ocither its constituencies oor the nation well if it fails to take what opportunity it has to soften the impact of those cuts on those people and areas that most need help.

Arms Control Talks

Insofar as Moscow's problems, economic and imperial, arise from the internal contradictions of Communism, there may be no cause for the West to worry. But insofar as they contribute to international instability, they are the West's problems, too. The instability would be reduced if the two sides could agree on the terms for arms control talks. The Americans evidently feel that they are not yet in a position of strength. The Russians feel that if the NATO missile program goes ahead, they will not be in a position of strength either. Both are wrong in that assessment.

Their military strengths are boundlessly adequate for all strategic contingencies. The danger to the U.S. position is that it will lose political support - in Germany, the Low Countries, even Britain - if its posture appears to be only one of confrontation. There is a stability factor on this side of the equation as well as on the Russian side, and neither will be reduced if efforts for arms control are undermined by spurious arguments about relative weakness in the Kremlin or the Pentagon.

Damascus, Beirut and even Riyadh in the manner reminiscent of the diplomatic shuttling of Dr. Henry Kissinger. As in the days of Kissinger-style diplomacy, part of the technique is to maintain an impression of activity, so that the potential belligerents are obliged to pause while the go-between is moving from capital to capital. This is what has happened in the case of Israel and Syria. Either Israel or Syria could still launch an attack while Mr. Habib is out of the way, but his creation of an atmosphere in which peace is at least being talked about has reduced the prospect of an unexpected outbreak of fighting.

- From the Times (London). 'Wages' of Violence

At a time of high unemployment in North-ern Ireland, the "wages" paid regularly to IRA activists out of the proceeds of bank robberies and protection money are in many cases more important than nationalist motives. That is one of the chief reasons why the policy agreed on between the prime minister of Britain and the premier of the Irish Republic last year has made oo progress. Although Irish reunification lies at the end of the road for both governments, "peaceful solution" is a term foreign to the IRA.

CHICAGO — The cat has been partially let out of the bag by the publication of a synopsis of the report on the Beel Trust, now in President Roosevelt's hands. The report will surprise many by its conservatism, but it is bad enough. While many sensational charges are rejected, enough is left to startle the world. The report describes the condition of the six plants inspected as filthy, insanitary and unhygienic. No attempt was made to exercise ordinary cleanliness. Deplorable conditions prevailed in some of the canning departments. One part in five of the meat was described as unfit for use as food, while the tins' ingredients were frequently not what they had been advertised to be.

Governor Pinchot did not mince words in attacking the power combinations. He charged four groups, the Morgan-Mellon, North American, Harris-Forces and Insull interests - with controlling 91 percent of the country's power stations and with "milking the public" of $500 million in overcharges annually.

Mr. Lefever, over many years of writing and interviewing, has made his answer to that question clear. The Times of London, in its obituary, described her as "one of the most outstanding and admired women of her generation." She was more than that, a breath of wind that blew across our lives, that cleared so many cobwebs from obscure corners, made so many unnecessarily complex issues plain and who inspired hundreds of thousands of readers and listeners in many countries, on most of the continents, to think seriously about the progress of their small planet, and their wider responsibilines in it and to remember, whatever the pressures and demands of the hour, that there was "only one earth" and it would be easier to destroy it than to recreate it.

Like the anonymous Egyptian writer of 2,000 years ago, she had the facility — in self-mocking tones, she would confess "the fatal facility" - to find "words that are unknown, utterances and sayings in fresh language that has not been debased ... an utterance that has not grown stale."

Postwar Ideas

It was this mastery over language that gave her her first success when at the tender age of 25, she joined Geoffrey Crowther as his assistant editor at The Economist and from that pulpit moved to shape some of the critical political and economic ideas of the postwar period.

Yet, as she campaigned against Communism, she argued with a rising tide of conviction that the West would never be really strong until it learned "frugality, compassion and the desire not to be fore-

ROME — The novelist, Ignazio Silone, has said that for Italians the advantage of democracy "is that the vote, conscientiously used, permits the poor also to share in the intrigue.

Most ordinary Italians, he says, conceive of public life "as nothing but fraud, theft and intrigue, no matter who is in power. And they are therefore profoundly skeptical of the possibility of effective democracy and laws applied equally

The ordinary man must therefore find protection. He must have help — his family and friends, a clan, association, union, party, a secret lodge. Without it, a man is at the mercy of the world. This, succinctly, is the explanation for the so-called P-2 scandal which has just rocked Italy.

The mistake of Americans is too often to underestimate the force of the past and of convention in other societies. We take the engineer's view of the world, which is that just about anything is possible, that reality is plastic. But the Eurobean error, and it is particularly an Italian error, is to think that nothing really changes or can change.

Foreign Control :

The peculiar quality of Italian political life, its deviousness, conspiracies and lawiessness, derives from Italy's experience of foreign mterventions, and then of subjec-tion to Spain, later to the Austri-ans, which lasted from the mid-16th century, including a crucial interruption by Napoleon, until the late 19th century — three bundred years of foreign occupation and control But since 1870, Italy has lived a different reality — especially since 1945, when economics began to accelerate demographic and social change. Tension between the dynamism of the society and its obsolescent politics is responsible for the terrorism that empted after 1968. It is responsible for the political alienation that is so marked in Italy today. It is responsible for such affairs as the P-2 scandal, where the private interests and greed of a secret camarilla took precedence over the public inter-

But it is also responsible for the public's desperate outrage at this affair. The new ftaly must burst out of this old and corrupt system. It will do so. The process is under way but it is slow. One hopes that

Haig's Second Wind

After Initial Scuffles, He Appears to Edge Toward Traditional Center of U.S. Politics

By Leslie H. Gelb

THE LATE-AFTERNOON sur barely penetrated the seaste office, with its wood-paneled walls and Colonial-style furniwood-paneled walls and Colonial-style furni-ture, as the secretary of state mused on Ameri-ca's situation in the world. "I think we've got more going for us," he said during the course of a 96-minute interview, "than we've had his-torically in the list 30 years." The "be-leaguered" Rassian leaders, he added, must understand that "there are hopes for arms control, hopes for the West to assist them in solving their dilemmas in the economic and agri-cultural spheres." Of course, there would be a price—"some reining in of what has been a hemorrhaging of risk-taking."

The now-famous hand-line voice of Alexander Meigs Haig Jr. was still there, the voice that has spent the last four months sounding the alarms about America's military weakness and lashing the Soviet Union for its contributions to international terrorism. But as he sat in his shirt sleeves, reaching for another ciga-rette, he seemed to be trying out a second voice, less abrasive, more balanced, edging toward the political center that has been the traditional home of American secretaries of state. And the new voice was in keeping with other recent moves he has made — increased personal contacts with key legislators, for example — seemingly simed at developing a new

What's more, these changes are matched by a dramatic switch in Mr. Haig's cavalier treat-ment of his colleagues in the Reagan administration. (Officials present at an early Cabinet meeting recall his response to a question from Agriculture Secretary John R. Block: "I have no reason to discuss that with you; it's our issue.") Worse, the White House came to believe that Mr. Haig was trying to usurp the authority of the president himself, and presidential aides meted out a harsh public punishment. Both the embattled Mr. Haig and his attackers declare that the fending is over, but clearly it is nothing more than a truce, and Reagan aides privately refer to "a trial peri-od,"

The bloodletting was a strange kind of prob-lem for Mr. Haig, whose previous career in the Army and as presidential chief of staff under Richard M. Nixon made him appear to be the consummate inside man, Yet there is much

He is a steadfast conservative who was pushed for his post by conservative Sen. Jesse. A. Helms, Republican of North Carolina—but he is clearly to the left of most of President Reagan's leading aides. ("Imagine my being the "liberal" in any administration!" he has said.) In fact, his hard-line pronouncements to date have simply alienated the center without satisfying the right. He and his aides are preoc-cupied with forestalling attacks from that

He can look forward, just by the nature of his job, to alienating the political aides around the president. For it is the secretary's task, as one associate said, "to take the interests of other countries into account and to argue the national interest over political interests. That would have to put him into some conflict with

He must have political support to accomplish his policy goals — but he has no power base of his own, no constituency in Congress or among the public, no strong personal rela-tionship with the president. He is said to be a recipient of advice and support from the circle around Henry A. Kissinger, who was Mr. Haig's boss as national-security adviser under Mr. Nixon (Mr. Kissinger is believed to be among those who counseled the secretary to make his rhetoric less strident) — but that is not an association Mr. Haig publicly acknowledges. Mr. Kissinger's popularity among the Reagan sides is distinctly limited. "We haven't got any friends," a senior State Department official lamented, "and we need them."

He must create a coherent, long-range for-eign policy — but up to now, the administration has been operating on an ad hoc basis, shifting its stance with each decision, and creating considerable confusion. The hitch is that the formulation of any coherent policy — just how the military lines should be drawn against Moscow, for example — would require that Mr. Haig do battle with the more conservative elements of the Reagan constituency. Yet he cannot take on the right without destroying the current political and philosophical unity in the party, and perhaps destroying himself. As many in the White House have acknowledged privately, it is a dilemma for the administra-

Mr. Haig's friends and staff constantly emphasize the practicality of the man. "Al ex-plodes bombshells publicly," said a longtime colleague. "That's his nature. But in private, he's a pragmatist." One aide offered a case in point: Mr. Haig's instincts probably urged him

The secretary of state is not the only player in the foreign-policy game who lays claim to being pragmant. Mr. Reagan's principal aides, the presidential counselor, Edwin Meese 3d, and the White House chief of staff, James A. Baker 3d, see themselves as the balance wheel between Mr. Haig and the political right. Increasingly, they are playing the role of adjudi-

Experience and Skill

For all Alexander Haig's experience and skill, he put on a textbook display of good drama and bad politics during his first months in office. At his confirmation hearings, he managed to suggest that Mr. Nixon really had done nothing wrong in the matter of Water-gate, and he alienated his senatorial inquisitors with a tough, argumentative stance. Shortly before the mauguration, at a meeting with the whose members had been chosen by Richard V. Allen, national-security adviser-designate, and blessed by Sen. Helms — Mr. Haig announced: "Thank you very much. Your work is done. You have one minute each to say what

Mr. Haig proceeded to take on the president, the White House staff and half his Cabinet colleagues. While Mr. Reagan was saying that he would make the key sub-Cabinet apthat he would make the key sub-Cabinet appointments, Mr. Haig was announcing that such posts at the State Department would be "my nominations." On Inauguration Day, before the White House could begin to organize the system for making national-security decisions, Mr. Haig presented his own plan, which reserved virtually all bureaucratic power to the secretary of state. The move failed, and it also alienated the very highest men in the administration: Mr. Meese, Mr. Baker and his deputy, Michael K. Deaver, and Defense Secretary Michael K. Deaver, and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, a close presidential friend whom Mr. Haig had actually been

The White House staff responded with a standard Washington weapon. The whole inci-dent was leaked to the press, a warning shot across Mr. Haig's bow. The front pages of ma-jor newspapers carried articles in which White House sources complained that Mr. Haig was seeking the limelight for himself. Mr. Reagan had decided to put Vice President Bush in charge of crisis management. Mr. Haig told a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee of his unhappiness with such a role for Mr. Bush and implied that he would resign if it came to pass. Later that same day, Mr. Reagan publicly slapped down his secretary of state, naming Mr. Bush as the crisis manager without even a mention of Mr. Haig's role.

The fireworks are apparently over now, but their effects linger on. The parties to the strug-gle have developed attitudes toward one another that will shape future relations, and Al Haig and others in and out of government were given some clear lessons on how to suc-ceed in the Reagan administration.

Members of the White House staff feel that Mr. Haig is a prima donna, perhaps ultimately uncontrollable. They point out that even after the public explosion over the crisis-manager matter, Mr. Haig still got out in front of the president on three high-profile issues. The secretary let it be known that he opposed Mr. Reagan's decisions to end the embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union and to sell sophisticated reconnaissance aircraft to Saudi Arabia. And after the attempted assassination of the president, Mr. Haig seemed to be taking a lot upon himself in his tense television appearance during which he proclaimed his now-famous line, "I'm in control here."

Haig's People

Meanwhile, Mr. Haig's people have reached their own conclusions about the White House staff. They have become convinced that James Baker is their main opponent there; they hold that Mr. Baker, a former campaign chief for Mr. Bush, might be trying to advance the vice president's presidential aspirations. (Mr. Haig has had his own aspirations in the same direc-tion.) Other parties to the battles, however, insist that Mr. Baker was not acting on his own but in full concert with Mr. Meese and Mr.

The Haig staff initially felt that while the national-security adviser is, traditionally, a natural competitor of the secretary of state, the incumbent, Mr. Allen, was harmless. They came to believe otherwise. Several people, for example, both inside and outside the govern-ment, report that Mr. Allen has told them that Mr. Haig is not, truly, a friend of Israel. They also say that Mr. Allen has cited doctors as his anthorities for claiming that patients who un-dergo bypass heart surgery, which Mr. Haig experienced, develop an uncontrollable urge to dominate other people. An aide to Mr. Haig characterizes both statements as "prepos-terous," and medical authorities deny that bypass surgery causes such an arge to domi-nate. Mr. Allen has chosen not to respond to inquiries about the statements.

Mr. Haig, himself, has not kept his bitterness hidden. Some aides say they have frequently heard from the secretary's lips a familiar refrain from his days in the Nixon White House: "So and so is trying to do a number on me." Mr. Haig has made no bones, for example, about telling friends and associates that the "three-headed Hydra monster" running the White House is not very efficient or profes-sional. He has often treated questions from reporters as unfriendly challenges, and his rela-tions with the press have become strained.

The public beating Mr. Haig received at the hands of the White House was virtually unprecedented, and be and his aides like to pretend that it was the work of that errant trio, not of the president himself. Yet it is clear that Mr. Reagan did little to defend his secretary of state during the battle.

The central lesson is that the president is prepared to go very far to see that his rules of teamwork are enforced. Two of Mr. Haig's main rivals, Mr. Allen and Mr. Bush, have won increased trust and influence by becoming stalwart team players. A senior administration official who knows the president well said of the recent problems of Mr. Haig: "Ron Reagan doesn't want any one of his key people out in front of anyone else. If someone does get out in front, he gets sawed off. People learned to be careful not to elbow one another. Al wanted to put his mark on the tree and got

According to Sen. Paul Laxalt, Republican of Nevada and a close friend and adviser to the president, the internal feuding over foreign policy has ended. In an interview, the senator said: "The president and everyone were preoccupied with the economy. Al moved into the vacuum, as he should have. But he had just been commander of NATO, and that's as near being treated like God as you can get in this world. So, Al had to adjust." As of now, Sen. Laxalt concluded, Mr. Haig "has developed a closer personal rapport with the president, and he finally realizes that all he has to do to meet or speak with the president, one-on-one, is to pick up the phone and call him."

There are others close to the White House who reach a similar conclusion: For the forseeable future, Mr. Haig is likely to keep his job. But their perspective is less friendly. The judgment has been reached, they say, that it would be too messy to discharge Mr. Haig. There is general agreement that he remains the most knowledgeable and experienced foreign-affairs person in the administration and the only one with a strong reputation abroad. And no one, they add, has come up with a plausible re-

Ulster's Women: Auxiliaries, Sympathizers, Victims of the Irish Republicans' Struggle

By William Borders

BELFAST — At the funeral of Bobby D Sands, the first of four fasting prisoners to die in May, his parish priest described what an ordeat his 66-day hunger strike had been for the family, especially for Rosaleen Sands, his mother.

The Rev. Liam Mullan said that in the final days he had advised Mrs. Sands to stay away. from the prison hospital where her son was dying, to spare herself, but that she had insisted on visiting him every day. "The Blessed Virgin Mary stayed with her son until the end, and I want to do that, too," the priest quoted Mrs. Sonde or serving.

Mrs. Sands as saying.
In church that rainy afternoon, as masked Irish Republican Army members stood outside waiting to take the body to the cemetery, it probably struck few as odd or presumptuous that Mrs. Sands would compare herself to Mary standing by the cross as Jesus died. The misty green myth of Irish republicanism main-tains a cherished role for the gumen's womenfolk, and especially for their mothers.

Some Irish women have played an activist role in the struggle, such as the legendary Maud Gonne, or Bernadette Devlin McAlis-key, the former member of Parliament and a leading organizer of support for the hunger

Movement Withers

Two women formerly prominent in the maelstrom of Northern Irish politics, Mairead Corrigan and Betty Williams, won the 1976-Nobel Peace Prize for their efforts to bring the two religious communities together. Their movement has withered, and they are no longer active.

More often, women have stood by, passive and suffering as men fought to drive the British out. From the early days of this ancient struggle, women have played a service role—supporting political action as Mrs. Sands did, offering sanctuary to fugitives and raising the next generation of warriors.

In the primates after each of the four deaths.

In the minutes after each of the four deaths of hunger strikers in May, women poured out of their houses in the poorer Roman Catholic neighborhoods to bang the lids of trash cans on the pavement, a traditional way of spreading bad news. Then, in angry little knots, they stood on street corners exconstring the British while their teen-age sons pelted army and po-lice patrols with bricks and firebombs.

The Brits have had two of mine in their jail already," a Belfast woman said the other eve-ming speaking with a mixture of distress and nationalist pride. "And now there's fear that they'll take the youngest one too."

However, some of these republican attitudes are clashing increasingly with the new wave of feminism coming, albeit slowly, to traditional Ireland: Members of the Belfast Women's Collective, formed in 1977, felt alienated from the nationalist movement, despite their republican sympathies, because of its conflicts with feminist goals.

All the women in the group agreed on their opposition to British imperialism, but we made cogent criticisms of the republican movement, particularly of its position on women," the collective said in an article it wrote for "Spare Rib," a British feminist magazine.

"We showed how women had been used and forgotten in the previous struggles for Ireland. This stand led to an increasing political isola-tion. Because we protested the British presence, we were labeled as republicans; at the same time, because we were highly critical of the republican movement, we were labeled as a bourgeois women's group. We couldn't win ei-

Northern Irish culture, dominated by unchanging sectarian struggle and old traditions, has helped to impede women's aspirations. Prof. Eileen Evason of the New University of Ulster, who has made extensive studies in poor neighborhoods all over the province, concluded: "It seems possible that significant changes have occurred in the attitudes and expectations of women in Northern Ireland on their rights and role within marriage, but that amongst men the notion of democracy within the home has so far made little progress."

In the 12 years since the present phase of violence began, the number of marriage breakdowns has increased sharply, with the strain of prolonged imprisonment an important factor. "He is out now, and no way is he the same person," a woman wrote after her husband, an IRA guerrilla, returned from jail. "The man I married was beautiful; now he is awful. Hatred is all I can see now in him."

Many wives and mothers of Protestant paramilitary men suffer similar anguish. But social workers say there is usually less alienation on their side because their struggle is to retain the established order, to keep the province British.

There are also many innocent victims, such as Roberta Guiney. Her husband happened to be delivering milk in a republican area, with his 14-year-old son along for the rice, on the morning Bobby Sands died. Their truck was stoned by angry pro-IRA youths. Mr. Guiney lost control and crashed, fatally injuring him-est and his area. self and his son.

At the boy's funeral, a prayer was said for all children living through the Irish troubles — bystanders like the milkman's son as well as young street warriors who learn early to throw rocks and bricks at police patrols. Raymond McCreesh, who died in a hunger strike at the age of 24, was 16 when he joined an active IRA battalion and only 12 when the current Others, only slightly younger, have almost no recollection of peace. This may turn out to be "a painful and unpredictable legacy," said a distressed mother of seven as she watched the ritual of 11-year-olds and 12-year-olds grimly masking their faces before an encounter with the police. Such women, although firm republicans, worry about what the struggle is doing to their children and homes, as Irish women have worried for generations.

Oscar Wilde Loses Again in Dramatized Trials

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribuni

L ONDON — "Feasting With Panthers" (at the Chichester Festival Theatre) has nothing at all in do with panthers and precious little with feasting; that, however, was how Oscar Wilde once described the thrill he found in dining with male prostitutes, blackmailers and ambitious underage office boys, though it was of course the even greater thrill of going to bed with such jailbait that finally landed him in Reading Gaol in 1895.

What we have here, in a production devised and directed and designed by Peter Coe, is a dramatized transcript of Oscar's three celebrated and scandalous trials. "Feasting With Panthers" is in that sense not a play at all but a painstaking (and on the first night also painful, thanks to the failure of one counsel's memory) reconstruction of the Wilde hearings line by line and submission by

It has all the qualities of one of those 1950s television programs in which famous cases were retried while "You the Jury" were asked to consider a verdict. It is also strongly reminiscent of the black-and white B movies in which Edgar Lustgarten used to creep around the scene of some particularly bloody crime asking us to decide whether the jury had got it right.

Confined to Court Proceedings

Quite apart from the fact that the Chichester stage and auditorium are a little spacious for a chamber drama of this kind, the overriding problem with "Feasing With Panthers" is that by confining Oscar and us to nothing but the court proceedings and a couple of brief quotes from "De Profundis," Mr. Coe misses a lot of the drama and much of the interest

It does not much matter that be has condensed the three trials into two, one on each side of the intermission, oor that be has removed Alfred Taylor from the original indictment, nor that be has made Carson the prosecutor in the second and third trial where in truth he appeared only for the defense of the Marquess of Queensberry in the first, though all this will annoy historians and detract from the play's documentary claims. What matters more is that the courtroom format cannot explain the dubious way the police went about collecting witnesses, nor the incidental dramas such as the French journalist who accidentally got called as a juror, misheard some evidence and reported to the European press that Oscar had been having an affair with the prime minister. Lord Rosebery. Nor are we allowed any feeling for the period, or the way in which the Wilde trial was just one in a series of high-society scan-dals with which the later Victorians kept themselves amused. We never get to know that Carson had been at Trinity College in Jublin with Oscar, nor the condition of Queensberry's mental bealth at the time of the leaving of the celebrated "somdomite" card. We are not even told that this was misspelled.

Queensberry's son, Lord Alfred Douglas, gets to say the odd word or two, and as usual is played as an effete aesthete instead of the infinitely more butch prizefighter be in fact was. And though, as Oscar, Tom Baker does a marvelously manic film-star grin from the dock, he never seems aware that his idiotic lie about his age, followed by a casual reference to the ugliness of a boy be had failed to kiss, have already opened the prison door to him. Oscar was aware of this, and it conditioned his behavior throughout the remainder of the trials.

By denying us all this incidental knowledge, "Feasting With Panthers" also denies us the chance to come to any real conclusions about what is going on in the courtroom, and so a vast amount of tension and interest is carelessly dispelled. The fascina-tion of the Wilde trials lies in what they have to teach us about contemporary Victorian society, about Oscar himself and about Queensberry. Moreover, to have four onlookers neatly spaced out in the public gallery scarcely conveys the atmosphere of a packed courtroom in which neither Max Beerbohm nor Jerome K. Jerome

In the second half we do, it's true, get some masterly vaudeville turns from the witnesses, notably Jeremy Anthony as Wood, but by this point we seem to have moved into the Oscar Follies and a Victorian tragedy has become nothing more than a minor legal

"Let England bear the responsibility for what she did to Oscar, wrote Alfred Douglas in 1937, and at least it cannot be said that England has borne ber responsibility in what Oscar would most have dreaded — total silence. But "Feasing With Panthers" does not come to terms with any of that, and the result is sadly arid.

Lindsay Anderson's new (and first) production of "Hamlet" at the Theatre Royal Stratford East has a curious but I think deliberate Victorian tackiness about it, as though the company were about to move on to "The Count of Monte Cristo" tomorrow with perhaps a matinee of "East Lynne" in the same sets. An air of faded red plush has spread from auditorium to stage, but by playing it as period melodrama Anderson and his prince (Frank Grimes) have restored a lot of the excitement to what was once widely believed to be a thriller.

Strong central performances come also from Peter Holmes as Horatio. Colette O'Neil as Gertrude and Del Henney as Claudius, all of whom seem to assume that they are playing to an audience with no knowledge of bow things are going to work out in the end. Given that there has not been a major Shakespearean production at Stratford East since 1957 they may well be right, and though Anderson's staging is much more meticulous and professional than anything done on that stage by Joan Littlewood or her disciples, it has retained all the virtues of an actors' theater where the plan is simply to tell 'em the tale and not bump into the furniture—of which there is precious little anyway.

Tolstoy Tale Strong Stuff, but Not Great Theater

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

DARIS — "If the reluctant descent of the 'downward path to death' constituted drama, then Tolstoy's 'Death of Ivan Byich' would be one of the greatest dramas ever written — which it certainly is not," wrote the celebrated critic William Archer, who translated lbsen into English and was privy to every twist of play-Simone Benmussa has put the Archer point to the test and proved it correct. Taking the Tol-stoy tale, born of its author's obsession with the inevitable when he reached middle age, she has arranged its incidents in a series of scenes and staged them in the The-atre du Rond-Point's small auditorium. Those who saw her excellent adaptation of George Moore's stoty of a Dublin housemaid who disguised herself as a manservant to tigment ber wages, "Alan Nobbs," are aware of Benmussa's skill as a theatrical technician. Here again she has tackled stubbornly resisting material and wrought from it an attention-holding, if exceedingly somber, playhouse experiment. As Archer predicted, however, it fails to hlossom into ereat drama.

Tolstoy's intention, according to the biographer Henri Troyat, was, at first, to write his story as the diary of a man struggling with and then resigning himself to death. Gradually it occurred to him that it would gain tragic depth by being told in the third person so that the situation would be seen from various angles.

Sense of Doom

lvan llyich is a conscientious official without much religious faith but guided by principles he has been taught by his middle-class parents. An unexpected promotion permits him to move with his family into more luxurious quarters and while hanging some curtains in his new home be falls from a ladder and is injured. The accident appears trivial. His doctor reassures him, but is uncertain of the nature of his ailment, and his wife and daughter, thinking his illness is not serious, try to cheer him.

Yet he senses that he is doomed, and begins to meditate on the false values that have ruled his existence. His only companion in his lonely hours is a peasant servant who eases his pain by holding his master's legs on his shoulders to relieve congested circulation. He is entreated to receive extreme unction and submits. His sufferings increase and he shrieks in agony and terror, then grows calm and sinks into oblivion and death.

Tolstoy relates Ivan Ilyich's history and demise as a moral warning and a condemnation of 19thcentury materialism. Despite its third-person narration it hinges on a deep conflict — in Anna de Noailles' words, "on those moments when, wearily seating himself between his destiny and his death, man in stupor contem-plates his inert, dark soul."

To restate and illuminate that situation in theatrical performance would require soliloquies by Shakespeare, and these Benmussa has been unable to supply. What she has done - and done well - is to parade before us the characters and incidents of the story, neatly, earnestly and absorbingly. What is missing is greatness.

The company she has enlisted, headed by Jacques Spiesser as the man who learns life's lesson too pose, but Ivan Ilvich is a role for a histrionic virtuoso, a Moissi, a

U.S. Courts Accept Method as Evidence

By Angel Castillo New York Times Service
NEW YORK — A new bloodtesting procedure using genetic markers to match a child with the father is revolutionizing court judgments on paternity.

The method is known as HLA. for buman leukocyte antigen. It identifies inherited genene markers in the blood's white cells, allowing a laboratory to match a child with its biological father in almost all cases.

New York state recently approved HLA for the courtroom. Laboratory fees are about $500, and under New York law, payment can be ordered by the judge from the alleged father or from public funds. Under statutes or court decisions, the testing has been accepted since 1979 in Arizona, California, Florida, Illinois, lowa, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, North Ca-rolina, Oregon, Washington and Use of HLA blood testing originally developed in 1952 for other purposes — produced a dra-matic outcome in a Brooklyn pa-ternity case. Two New York City men — identified only as Duane, 27, and Albert, 30 — filed separate suits against an unmarried woman, Cynthia, 28, with each claiming to be the father of her 7-year-old daughter. Cynthia insisted the real father was Albert, but after a nonjury tri-al last August, Judge Frank Torres found that the testimony of Cyn-thia and Albert was not worthy of belief." He tentatively concluded that Duane was the real father.

While be prepared to write his decision, Judge Torres granted a request from Cynthia's lawyer for HLA testing. Doctors certified that Albert was most likely the girl's father, with a 97.3-percent level of prohability. They ruled out Duane absolutely.
As a result, Judge Torres ruled that Albert was the father.

99.9-Percent Accuracy Dr. Fred H. Allen Jr. and Dr.

Leon N. Sussman, researchers at the New York Blood Center, say that when used in conjunction with the traditional red-cell bloodgrouping tests. HLA testing can yield negative evidence ruling out 99.9 percent of falsely accused

Use of HLA testing also yields strong positive evidence - previously unavailable. When HLA testing does not exclude a man as the father, a statistical formula is applied that takes into account the prevalence of certain genetic traits in the population groups to which the mother, child and alleged fa-ther belong. The computation, re-sults in a prohability, usually greater than 95 percent, if the man in fact the father, according to Scientists at the Sloan-Kettering Institute reported recently that HLA testing was so effective that when a 24-year-old woman became pregnant a few weeks after being raped, they were able to make a prenatal determination with a 96percent certainly that the woman's husband, and not the rapist, was responsible for the pregnancy.

Federal estimates indicate that of all births in the United States almost 3.6 million last year - at least 16 percent now occur out of wedlock, compared with only 4 percent in 1950. Genetic Test Bankers' Conference Is Warned Can Indicate To Heed Needs of Third World

By Hobart Rowen

Washington Post Service
LAUSANNE - An international monetary conference grouping some 200 of the world's leading hankers has begun bere with criticism of U.S. and British policy toward the Third World.

Former British Prime Minister Edward Heath told Tuesday's opening session of the four-day private conference that the United States and Britain are blocking ad-equate aid to the Third World and thereby increasing the danger of a global economic collapse.

Mr. Heath warned that when the

Mr. Heath also roundly criticized high U.S. interest rates, a source of general concern to the financial community assembled here. At a private session closed to journalists, Mr. Heath said U.S. interest rate policy was based "on a -New York Times Service PEKING — China has agreed to arrangements for borrowing from the U.S. Export-Import Bank that will enable it to greatly increase its. U.S. imports, the U.S. Embassy here has announced.

The agreement reached two weeks ago by Bank of China and Ex-Im Bank negotiators and announced Tuesday, clears the way for a loan package that would allow China to buy $75 million worth of steam-generation power-equipment and technology from U.S. companies. About 75 percent of the two loans is expected to be financed by the Ex-Im Bank. The loans require approval from the Ex-Im Bank board, which is ex-

Pound Falls Below $2; DM Firmer

LONDON - The dollar gained sharply against the British pound Wednesday as sterling fell below $2 in early New York trading for the first time since 1979. The dollar weakened slightly against most other major currencies, dealers

The pound in New York was quoted at $1.9960, compared with the opening $2.0155.

Sterling closed in London at $2.0165 after opening at $2.0335 and following Thesday's close of $2.0375. Traders said when the pound dropped to a low of $2.0115 the Bank of England intervened to smooth the decline at levels last traded in early 1979.

The dollar was firmly underpinned by continued high interest rates in the United States. Dealers said weakness in sterling was prompted by reports of Mexico's $4 cut in crude oil prices. After reports that Mexico planned to cut its oil prices, there was speculation that the British National Oil Co. also would be forced to cut oil prices.

Heavy European selling of sterling Wednesday also was the product of an increasing market convic-tion that the pound has been overvalued against other European currencies, other foreign exchange dealers said.

Sterling sales have been particu-larly notable from Switzerland, they said, adding that the pound's fall was further accelerated by top-loss selling.

The dollar closed at 2,3595 Deutsche marks after Tuesday's 2.3700, and it closed at 2.0900 Swiss francs against the previous close of 2,1005.

In one of his stemest statements on the issue Mr. Schmidt told the Bundestag that although the Unit-ed States could afford interest rates of 20 percent for a time, Western Europe could not follow suit without a major increase in unemployment

"Even in the most favorable case, this very high interest rate level will lead to a considerable delay in world economic recovery," he said.
"In the least favorable case, it can lead to worldwide depression."

Mr. Schmidt, speaking during a four-day parliamentary debate on the 1981 federal budget, said he would appeal for closer coordina-tion and cooperation between major Western countries at the sevennation economic summit in Ottawa at the end of next month.

The warning was the latest in a series by Mr. Schmidt, who had told President Reagan during a visit to Washington of his deep concern at the impact on Europe of tight U.S. monetary policy.

Europe's Stubborn Recession

AP-Dow Jones LONDON - Western Europe's recession. which was supposed to be over hy midyear, shows no signs of making an early exit and even the most optimistic analysis say that recovery will not occur until late this year.

The slump has proved unexpectedly severe and long-lasting for a number of reasons. The basic cause was inflation: At a time when budget deficits would ordinarily have been allowed to grow to stimulate the economy, governments chose to fight inflation with tough monetary and fiscal policies that drove up interest rates, discouraged investment and limited public spending.

High interest rates in the United States reinforced the upward pressure on European rates.

the industry.
Sales of penoleum products in France were 18.8 million tonnes, or 23.5% of the domestic market, compared to 23.3% in 1979. The Group's other European retining and distribution subsidiaries were either in a profit prin a break-even position, with the exception of Germany, where margins declined.

From the end of the first quarter of 1980, the European heavy chemicals industry suffered severe lowes due to production overcapacity. From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange, struggling to overcome uncertainties about the course of interest rates, staged a rally in the final hour of trading Wednesday to close slightly higher after heing down throughout the trading session.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which plunged 10.48 points

Wednesday to close at 989.71. It had been down more than 5 points in the early going and was down more than two points an hour before the close. Declines led advances, 938-501, among the 1,816 issues traded. The NYSE volume was 57.71 change issues.

Analysts said Wall Street was being hindered by uncertainties over interest rates. The investment community had been hopeful of a decline following two drops in the nation's money supply. But investors have been cha-grined by signs the Federal Re-serve will not relax its anti-inflation policies of tight credit anytime soon and that interest rates could remain high for the near future.

A signal of Fed intentions is that the federal funds rates banks charge one another for overnight loans have risen the past couple of days. That keeps the cost of bank borrowing high.

Over the past week, most of the nation's major banks have lowered the prime lending rate they charge top corporate customers a half point to 20 percent. But there is growing concern that this trend will not last. Some analysts have

U.S. Bought Less Foreign Exchange

NEW YORK — The U.S. Treasury and the Federal Reserve bought the equivalent of $778 million in Deutsche marks on the foreign exchange market in the February-to-April quarter, the smallest intervention since early 1976, the New York Federal Reserve Bank

U.S. authorities sold $74 million in marks on March 30, the date of the assassination attempt on President Reagan. There has been no intervention since then, the bank said, although the Federal Reserve continued to operate in the market as an agent for foreign central hanks. Overall, gross market intervention in the quarter by major central banks is estimated at $24 billion, compared with $21 hillion in the previous quarter and a record $38 billion in the February-April, 1979 quarter.

ANNUAL AND EXTRAORDINARY GENERAL MEETINGS OF MAY 21, 1981

The characteristics of the world market for oil were appreciably modified in 1980 as a result of the reduction in demand in the United States and in Western Europe, notably in France. The Refining and Distribution sector once again incurred losses as the prices of the principal finished products, which are subject to Government control in France, were slow to respond to increases in the prices of crude oil or the dollar, the currency io which the crude oil is paid for.

ELF AQUITAINE's industrial sector grew with the acquisition, jointly with the TOTAL Group, of certain petrochemical activities of RHONE-POULENC, which will provide outlets for the refining sector.

European bankers and economists predict that the inflation-adjusted growth in output of goods and serices in 12 Western Europe-an countries — Norway, Denmark, Finland and the EEC excluding Greece — will at best reach 1 per-cent this year and that the 12 economies could even show a slight overall decline. This would follow 1980's estimated growth nf only about 1.5 percent. Next year, the analysts say not to count on growth of more than 2 to 3 per-cent, more likely the former.

But even that bit of prognosti-cating is heavily hedged. J. Paul Horne, the senior European economist at Smith Barney, Harris, Up-ham in Paris, forecasted an upturn in the final quarter of 1981—as-suming that U.S. interest rates come down in the second half, per-mitting the European countries to lower theirs. If the U.S. rates stay high, he said, "the recovery would be postponed until early next

Other factors that could delay or even abort a recovery include a surrender to protectionism, another oil-price shock, or the economic and trade dislocations that would inevitably follow a Soviet invasion

Questions raised by France's election of a Socialist president, pledged to big public spending and nationalization of major industries, further cloud the economic outlook for Western Europe. "Substantial parest and disorganization stantial unrest and disorganization in French economic life" are likely. said Hans Mast, the chief economist at Swiss Credit Bank in Zurich. In America, the face of banking just changed forever. Introducing First Interstate Bank.

As of June 1, United California Bank, First National Bank of Oregon, First National Bank of Arizona, Pacific National Bank of Washington, and 17 other U.S. banks in 11 Western states changed their names.

As of June 1, the 21 member banks of Western Bancorporation became a network of banks serving people through nearly 900 offices in the American West.

As of June 1, the 21 banks forming Western Bancorporation (America's largest multi-state banking organization, with assets over $32 billion) became the First Interstate Bank network.

No other banking system can offer the coverage, the experience, the depth of knowledge of the American West. In addition, our international network covers the Pacific Rim at 15 locations. And 18 more locations in major cities can meet your needs around the world.

Now, one phone call to the nearest First Interstate office listed below will put you in touch with the First Interstate Bank network, the first and only banking system that can serve you throughout the American West.

We invite you to make that call.

Schmidt Attacks .36 Steel Subsidies BRUSSELS — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany has appealed to the leaders of the nine other EEC countries for a swift end to steel subsidies, diplomatic sources said Wednesday. An EEC meeting of industry ministers in Luxembourg Thursday is to review EEC Commission proposals for rules barring all aid by the end of 1985. West German sources said Bonn would press for the cutoff date to be the end of 1984 and for a general tightening of the Commission's proposals. West Germany has made veiled warnings in the past that it might seek permission from the Commission to impose import levies on the ground that steel subsidies distort .45 .30 .345 .306 .306 .206 Yearly highs and lows reflect the previous 52 weeks plus the surrant week, but not the latest tracking day. A LIFE IN OUR TIMES

Memoirs By John Kenneth Galbraith. 563 pp. $16.95.

Houghton Mifflin; 2 Park St., Boston, Ma. 02107. Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

A LWAYS when reviewing a new book by the prodigious John Kenneth Galbraith, one is tempted to while away the space simply quoting passages. His memoirs. "A Life in Our Times." doo't alter this temptation. On every subject Galbraith is succinct and witty. On the experience of growing up a Galbraith on a farm in Ontario: "My legacy was the inher-ent insecurity of a farm-reared boy in combination with an aggressive feeling that I owed it to all I encountered to make them better informed." On the uses of classroom discussion:
"Discussion, in all higher education, is the vacuum which is used to fill a

On Franklin D. Roosevelt and the business community: "Roosevelt is assumed to have made hostiliry toward business an American intellection." tual norm. But it was the business attacks on him that made it inevitable." On the difference between capitalism and Communism: "Under capitalism man exploits man. And under Communism it is just the reverse."

But to resort exclusively to quotation of "A Life in Our Times" would disguise several vital truths, not the least being that the book is full of strong opinion and proceeds by the vehicle of anecdote. Of course, these elements converge occasionally.

Also, merely to quote would be to obscure the serious husiness of the book. That husiness is to trace the steps of its author's astonishingly varied and useful life - his passage from that Ontario farm to Harvard to the that Ontario farm to Harvard to the New Deal to Fortune magazine to In-dia to fame and fortune high on the list of best-selling books and on into voluble retirement. Though he warns us at the start that this book "is, delib-erately, a view outward on events, people and ideas," Galbraith's vigor of expression, as well as an account of of expression, as well as an account of a period of gloom and psychotherapy, prevents the writing from ever sounding impersonal.

That serious business is also to set the record straight — on what his books were about and how he evolved his theory of "The Affluent Society" and "The New Industrial State," as two of his most important works were named; on why the bombing of Germany during World War II was less than useless, why it was patently unoecessary to wage atomic warfare on Japan and why he came to be a dis-senter on the war in Vietnam. On inflatioo. And, enchantingly, oo such movers and shakers he came to know well as the New Dealer Leoo Henderson, Paul Baran ("the most interesting economist I have ever known"). Bernard M. Baruch, Adlai E. Stevenson, John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Iohnson

Finally, there is the serious business of acknowledging certain mistakes — of having misdesigned his first model of having misdesigned his first model of "wartime economic management" when he was to charge of preventing inflation during World War II: of having suggested, in a memorandum to President Kennedy, "that almost any alternative to [the regime of Ngo Dinh] Diem would be better and would turn back the Vietcong": and of having once "inexcusably" misused the word "hopefully" — though far more often he is glad to acknowledge that he was right about things.

There is one other reason not to

There is one other reason not to succumb to a review composed entirely of quotation. That is to avoid the implication that only certain passages in the book are gracefully written.
One further virtue that Professor Galbraith acknowledges is that early in his writing career he began to experi-ment "oot only with clarity but also cadence and rhythm."

"There is," he writes, "oo mystery here; you test the words and sentences until the result rewards the ear. If your ear is right, then so is the

As always, the rhythm is right in "A Life in Our Times." But it didn't come easily to the author. In a closing passage on writing, he confesses that the present volume went through six revisions before its language seemed acceptable. It is a relief to learn that It is unfair enough that only one out of the millions of us has the good luck in be John Kenneth Galbraith. It would be intolerable if his prose style had come to him as magically as his iden-

"Lady in the Dark." The pronouncement summarizes the pinnacle she had obtained in the between-the-wars period. Now Sheridan Morley in a brisk biography explains ber Anglo-American vogue and, in as far as pos-

Her father was a pantomime clown who soon disappeared from the home, and her mother, though not of "the profession," quickly developed into the traditional stage mama. At 8 little Gertrude was singing in concert party shows at English seaside resorts. At 10 she was in pantomime at the Lyceum. Basil Dean engaged her to be an angel in Gerhart Hauptmann's dream play. "Hannele." A fellow angel was the child actor, Noel Coward. "She was very mondaine, carried a handbag with a powderpaff and frequently dabbed her generously upturned cose," be recalled in his memoirs. "She gave me an orange and told me a few mildly dirty stories, and I loved her from then onward."

During World War I, Andre Charlot, a French music-hall impresario, was introducing intimate revue to London. The edolescent Gertrude, engaged for the chorus of his first pro-duction, rose to be a major feature of his subsequent shows. In 1924, Charlot embarked for New York with his company, including Gertrude and Beatrice Lillie. His streamlined revue, witty, cordial, unpretentious and stylishly British, was something new on Broadway, a relief from the lavisb extravaganzas of Ziegfeld.

George Gershwin selected Gertrude to star in his musical, "Oh, Kay." But its ambitious leading lady also wanted to try her hand as a straight comedi-

Connors Defeated, Navratilova Upset In French Tennis

PARIS -- An umpire overruled a linesman at a critical moment Wednesday in the French Open tennis tournament, and the replayed point sent Jimmy Connors into a tailspin from which he could Connors was eliminated from the tournament by Jose-Luis Clerc, 4-6, 6-2, 4-6, 7-5, 6-0. He won only eight points in the seven straight games he lost after the controver sial call in the quarterfinal match.

Point Replayed

Connors was ahead two sets to one, but trailing 5-6, in the fourth set with the score at 30-30 when Clerc returned a half that landed on or near the baseline. The lines-man called the ball out, but the umpire in the chair at the net im-mediately ordered the point replayed, saying the ball had fallen Infuriated, Connors made characteristic gestures of displeasure at the umpire before netting a shot to go behind, 30-40. He then lost the set on a winner by Clerc, and did not win another game.

The match lasted four hours and 26 minutes, not counting a 40-min-ute break for ram, and at times was as sloppy as the soaked red clay it was played on.

Off and On

During the first four sets both players seemed to turn themselves on and off. Each seemed to have streaks in which he volleyed effectively and returned well-placed passing shots. Yet each made plethors of mistakes. At the end, Clerc was making the right shots while Connors was sending balls

Connors' postmatch comments were short. Sippant and hardly enlightening. In reference to the disputed call, he said of the umpire: "Four or five years ago I probably would have jerked him out of the chair." He called the incident "a good lesson" for him, adding, "usually I can forget about it and go on playing."

By defeating the American for the third time without losing, Clerectended his winning streak-to 16 matches. Just before entering the French Open he had won tournaments in Florence and Rome.

Billy Martin, Umpire-Baiter: The Classic Mold Is Still Intact

By Shirley Povich

WASHINGTON — Billy Martin dashed from the Oakland dugout in a temper Friday night in Toronto. He was trate at the calls of plate umpire Terry Cooney and went belly to belly with Cooney. Soon he bumped him, hard.

He was called for charging, which baseball equates with feloni-ous assault. For the record, Martin also kicked and threw dirt all over the ump's blue suit, front and back, and scuffed more dirt over the plate — all the while screaming and ranting.

That part was sandbox behavior. It was his previous bellicosity that fetched Martin a $1,000 fine and a one-week suspension from American League president Lee MacPhail, who made his judgment after viewing the films.

Did the punishment fit the crime? No.

Take That...

MacPhail, in effect, said to Martin, "Take that, and that," applying a second slap on the wrist and telling every other manager in the league: It's OK, boys, to roogh up an umpire occasionally — the fine will he only a measly $1,000 and a few days off.

The guaranteed safety of umpires from physical abose from the players is a foundation of the game, oecessary because there are bullies in some of those baseball uniforms. Fans being what they are, the American psyche does oot offer protection for the umps. It must come from the top - from

MacPhail's penalty for Martin cago, Shooty Babitt's two-run can he measured against the em-triple capped a five-run first as phatic action taken by National ague President Warren Giles in 1941 against Brooklyn pitcher Johnny Allen, who roughed up umpire George Barr. Allen drew a $5,000 fine and a 30-day suspen-sion in an era when the better players were making $10,000 a year, oot a million. On that basis, MacPhail could have rapped $200,000-a-year man Martin with a $20,000 fine, oot the thousand that comes out of his small-change

Martin is appealing the fine, mostly to save face. He should pay it eagerly, and say grace.

Nuisance, Delay

He violated two of baseball's most explicit commandments: Thou Shalt Not Make Physical Cootact With an Umpire" and Thou Shalt Not Go on the Field 10 Dispute a Ball or Strike Call."

The warning not to go on-field to dispute a call at the plate is the decree of Cal Huhbard who, as the American League's supervisor of umpires, wrote it into the rules in the early 1960s.

Joe Cronin, the retired A.L. president, said yesterday, "Cal showed us how all those visits by the managers from the dugouts were not only a ouisance, but were delaying the games, making them too loog. Hubbard was right, because I used to be one of those kind of managers myself.

"But I wasn't the worst offender. Jimmy Dykes was. Dykes was off the bench screaming about balls and strikes dozens of times a game, I only squawked oo third strikes. Paul Richards would slow up a game badly by that leisurely saunter to the plate to complain about a call, all the while giving his relief man time to warm up.

this one. Finally start hack to the dugout and hear the fans' cheers, which is, perhaps, the whole idea in the first place.

A count of Weaver's 79 ejections probably would show he picks his spots: He takes the heat off himself by almost always getting thrown out of losing games. Ossie Bluege, manager of the old Washington Senators, was thrown out only once, in Boston. Asked if be had cussed out ump Ed Rom-mel, Bluege said, "I didn't cuss him. All I told Rommel was: What Bucky Harris called you last week goes for me, too."

Ump Barks Back

On one occasion, it was an ump who got slapped down by a league president. That was the late Bill McGowan, who was fined and sus-pended for eight days by American League President Will Harridge "for using obscene language toward the press box."

At the time the finest of all umpires. McGowan also was famous for his language. Remembers Joe Cronin: "I'm at bat in Washington when the fans are on McGowan something fierce and he is mutter-ing. All right, you government clerk SOBs. Wait uotil 1 call the oext one."

The oext day in Boston, when I'm at bat again, he's telling those fans, 'All right, you Boston Catholic SOBs, wait 'til you hear my next call.'

"Horses," Campo mused, "You get locked in — you have to keep working. The difference is, I enjoy it." He rolled the cigar between the thumb and fingers of his left hand. You have to do it for yourself, allenge yourself as an individual. Besides, I'm outs."

There are those who suspect that if Campo were not the trainer of Pleasant Colony, no more than four or five rivals would oppose the colt in the Belmont. Such are the jealousies in racing, particularly when the man with the big horse is considered by many to be too loud, too arrogant.

What critics found especially grating was that Campo did not get Pleasant Colony until seven weeks before the Derby, when the colf was transferred from Buckland Farm's other New Yorkbased division, trained by O'Donnell (Odie) Lee.

Critics keep mentioning the trainer's past, but it is his future. that appears to be catching up with John P. Campo. ural for Campo, who grew up poor in New York City and worked his way up the racing ladder from a $75-a-week job as a stablehand after dropping out of high school to come onto the racetrack. He was let go from one of his earliest track jobs by a prominent trainer who heard him yelling in the shed row and told the stable foreman, "Get rid of that loudmouth." Says Campo today of that trainer: "Do you think he made a mistake?"

Some trainers get to their barns in fancy suits at 9 a.m. Not Campo. It was 6 o'clock on a recent morning when his Mcroedes-Benz pulled up in the stable area at Barn 48, where he trains a 40-horse pubstable for 10 different owners. He was in beige corduroy slacks and a blue windbreaker over a yellow shirt. Campo strode through the shed row, looking first into the stall where Pleasant Colony was stand-ing and then into the others, giving instructions for each horse. "Every horse I train is a part of me," he said. "I don't do nothing else. No golf, no bowling, no hobbies. I don't even go on vacations."

At Pleasant Colony's workout,

Shergar, ridden by Walter Swinburn, stormed home a winner in Wednesday's 202d running of the Derby Stakes at Epsom, England. Glint of Gold (wearing shadow roll, center of course) was second. The 10-length victory margin was the greatest in a Derby this century; the triumph by Shergar, a 10-11 favorite, was worth $303,000. Said Swinburn. 19: "I was just a passenger on a very good horse."

"I don't get along with them," he said in a flat, subdued tone that suggested both resentment and regret. "I hardly ever see them."

That does not appear in the bio-graphical press clips, which note that Campo, the oldest son of Italian immigrants, was born on Man-hattan's 14th Street and that his father, a sewing-machine operator, moved the family, when John was a young teen-ager, to Ozone Park in Queens, across the street from the old Aqueduct race track. It was there that Campo, a Roy Rogers fan, eventually saved $160 to buy a palomino the same color as Trigger so he could play cowboy at the Sunset Riding Academy in Howard Beach Defining the real Campo, as opposed to the celebrity the news media has dubbed "The Fat Man," has not been easy, said Jack Klugman: "He's by Damon Runyon out of a Don Rickles mare."

He is particularly defensive when he talks about his accom-plishments during 13 years as a trainer, a career that began after a nine-year apprenticeship with Eddie Neloy, trainer for the Phipps family. It was Neloy who persuaded Campo to take a 14-week Dale Carnegie course to acquire polish. Campo worked four years for Neloy as a groom and five years as

Master of the Woodblock

But Kiyoshi Saito Is Relatively Unknown in Japan

By Christine Chapman national Herald Tribune

AMAKURA, Japan - In "master." Kiyoshi Saito, who will be 74 this year, may be Japan's foremost living sensei of the woodblock.

Shiko Munakata died in 1975, and 86-year-old Un'ichi Hiratsu-ka lives in Washington, D.C. Connoisseurs of hanga, or creative prints, have placed Saito with these two artists, whose work epitomizes Japan's mastery of the modern woodblock.

But, unlike Munakata or Hiratsuka, Saito remains relatively unknown in Japan. Although be has lived and worked there all his life, most Japanese are unaware that the modest old man who lives in the ancient capital of Kamakura is an artist of international reputation.

His countrymen's apparent lack of appreciation for his art rankles him, he revealed in an in-terview in the handsome Western-style house where he lives with his wife. Over cups of green tea and endless cigarettes, Saitosensei tried to explain what he sees as the Japanese idea of mod-

"Japanese lack a sense of true beauty. They like a great name, an authority. They don't have an eye for my work. They appreciate abstract art, Western style. They look down on Japanese scenery and refuse to paint it. There will

They consider it only a medium of mass communication." An expert in graphic art and in the taste of the Japanese agreed with Saito. Kikusni Kuwahara, assistant director of Kaigado, 2 Tokyo gallery, described the Jap-anese penchan for classification: "The Japanese even place artists in categories. Of first importance, they think, are oil paint-ers; second, sculptors; next, watercolorists; and in last place, graphic artists.

notation of the word hange as printing, they think lightly of it.

"We Japanese are more interested in European artists than in Japanese," acknowledged Kuwahara, whose gallery fea-tures French artists. "Saito-san has been a great woodblock artist. He is like a genius with an unusual geometric sense. His technique always 'deforms' the subject, but that technique is his

'Classical Motifs'

Saito's subjects are what the Japanese call "classical motifs," the temples, shrines, Buddha, gaishas, stone lanterns, farmhouses and other common beauties. Yet his sense of proportion, or distortion, makes the subject fresh and draws the viewer into the heart of the print. The texture of the wood is apparent in his best pictures; he works the grain for musual effects. He has been prolific - one collector termed him "prolifically prolific" — and some of his work is crivial. Other prints echo Munch or Mondrian, who, he admits, influenced him.

"He did things in print that were indigenous to Japan, which became symbols of the country to Westerners," said Frances Blakemore, an American artist, author of "Who's Who in Modern Japanese Prints" and owner of the Franell Gallery in Tokyo.

During the occupation, Americans discovered Saito. Blakemore, who was chief of exhibits for Gen. Douglas MacArthur's rehabilitation program, said, Every GI could afford a woodblock to send home. And an artist could always scrounge a piece of wood to cut with loving care. Saito and other artists worked with minimum supplies. A do-ityourself art movement began in which the artist made the drawing out the block and printed the edition himself."

Saito speaks affectionately of American enthusiasm for his work. He recalls meeting Mac-Arthur and giving him a print. He remembers with pleasure a Fourth of July party at the U.S. Embassy when Edwin O. Reischauer was ambassador in the 1960s. He is grateful to the Americans who have been loyal to him throughout his career.

With American support, Saito

was able to continue working and eventually was invited to participate in exhibitions in Japan and the West, where the honors accumulated. In 1951 he won his first international award at the Biennial Exhibition in Sao Paulo, Brazil

His prints hang in the River-side Art Museum, Boston's Museum of Fine Arts and the Museum of Modern Art in New York. Saito donated pieces to the universities of Michigan and Hawaii. But until April, when the new municipal museum of Fukushima Prefecture presented an exhibition bonoring him, there was no major collection of his work in Japan.

Spring Show

Saito is not quite without honor in his own country. He has done well financially and critical-ly. A spring exhibition of his new work at the Mitsukoshi Gallery netted him millions of yen. Municipal muscums around Japan are now asking for his work.

The Japanese are buying him now that be's expensive," said Norman Tolman, an American living in Tokyo whose private collection numbers 3,000 prints. "The first print I ever bought was by Saito." The least expensive Saito print is 30,000 yen, or about $135; the most expensive is 200,000 yea.

Saito was horn in Aizu. Fukushima Prefecture, in 1907. When he began his career in the 1930s, he worked first in oils. He still paints in stant, the ink used in calligraphy, and he derives great satisfaction from drawing. His ideas come from his sketches, he said.

"I don't care if it's oil or woodblock. Art is what I'm trying to create. I like simple art, art organized in a certain order. I find great charm in simplifying."
He is not concerned about his place in art, he said. He leaves that to the critics and the historians. He does not know, or care to know, about the Tokyo art world. He did not know that the late Premier Masayoshi Ohira presented three Saito prints to Jimmy Carter when Ohira met the former president in Washing-ton in 1979.

As he ignores such trifles, he shuns attempts to define his work. His longtime friend Tatsu-jiro Takahashi, manager of the Yoseido Gallery in Tokyo, calls him "romantic" rather than real-istic. Salto considers himself a "pure arrist," and although Salto enthusiasts speak of the Japanese feeling in his art even when his subject is Paris, he said: "I don't think I'm trying to capture the spirit of Japanese beauty. It's natural I am Japanese."

Saito's work may be seen in To-kyo at the Franell, Kaigado, Kato, Murakami and Yoseido galleries use by the society and the public Trustees of the society favor the arrangement, but many members do not. Society chairman Hans Brill said leasing the house to Dunaway would "knock all the stuffing out of the society."

Since their release from Iran in January there has been a scramble among some of the 52 former hostages and their families for book contracts. It appears that the first hostage story to hit hard covers will be that of Barry Rosen, the former press attache at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, and his wife, Barbara. They have just signed a contract with Doubleday to produce an account of their experience es during his 444 days in captivity. Their stories — to be told in the first person in alternating chapters — are being written by George Feiffer, who won the assignment after half a dozen writers were considered, according to the Rosen's agent, Julian Bach, Bach, said Tuesday the Doubleday advance and magazine serial rights purchased by Good Housekeeping amounted to "close to $100,000."

If they won't lend you an ear or give you a cheer, hand them a bear. That was Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson's solution after he took Thompson's solution after he took the podium at a labor union rally in Springfield and was greeted with boos for his allegedly anti-labor stance. Thompson cooled down the opposition by inviting the throng to the governor; mansion for a cold one. James Skill-back a Thompson next side said beck, a Thompson press aids, said a call was placed to Thompson's wife, Jayne, asking if he could in-vite "a few thousand close friends over for a party on the lawn." Permission granted, the governor's te-election committee placed a rush order for 82 kegs of beer. The only problem was the mansion's piumb ing which couldn't handle the crowd, so more than a dozen portable toilets were trucked in.

Grzegorz Krynicki, a grammar school student from Brzozow, Poland, knew something about Kan-sas' stormy reputation. He wanted to learn about Boeing aircraft, so be put his request for brochures in writing and mailed it to "Tornado, Kansas, USA." The letter found its way to Jack Wecker of the Boeing Military Airplane Co. in Wichita.
